Louisville, Ky., Feb. 20.--Building operations in the city during January showed a bad slump, but are coming to bat fairly well this month. The bad weather experienced during January and most of this month has been such that no outdoor building could be done, zero temperatures, snow, ice, etc., making it impossible to do any outdoor work whatsoever. All sand digging, etc., also stopped, the river being full of running ice up to within a few days ago, blocking all brick and tile shipping from river plants. However, the architects offices are well loaded with plans, and it is said that Louisville will experience one of the busiest summers in her history if all of the projects now in hand are carried out. These projects include a new million dollar refinery for the Standard Oil Co., a new public auditorium, two large club...
